2 build need to run every time? My angular2 app works nicely on my computer, but I build it with Typescript and it always takes about 3-4 minutes to run. I thought the build process might do something different during this time, but it always looks like this: Is there a way to stop this from happening or is this normal? A: I believe the build script is a little overzealous. It seems to be calling npm install for Angular for each module, even though angular-cli is configured to not reinstall modules between builds. I think it's checking for changes in each module when it runs npm install because
